A Queer Discovery.

While George Cabiness, the contractor, was at work last week at Dick McHam's place south of town he unearthed a clay pipe which was not quite as valuable as an ancient relic as a piece of Aztec pottery, says the Paris News, but it is nevertheless to be classed as quite a curiosity. Mr. Cabings took an old bois d'are block that had served as a support for sills for more than 60 years and split it open in order to make two blocks of it. In the center of the block the clay pipe was brought to life. The block appeared to have grown all around the pipe solid, but when split open there was a cavity in the center about as large as a person's wrist in which the pipe was enclosed. The pipe had the name 'Catlin' on it in raised letters. Old residents who have seen it say that it is a kind of a pipe that used to be given away as a prize with a certain brand of tobacco that to be sold when freight was half to be sold when freight was half to be sold when freight was half to be sold be cured only that the could be cured to the cured only that the could be cured to the c -Petty Enterprise.
